COURSE OVERVIEW

This training course explores how cultural heritage can be used as a powerful educational resource to support interdisciplinary learning. Participants will discover strategies for integrating local and European heritage into lessons, designing activities that promote language skills, creativity, critical thinking and intercultural awareness. Through fieldwork, digital tools and experiential tasks, teachers learn to create meaningful learning experiences that connect students with history, identity and community values.

METHODOLOGY

The course uses an experiential, learner-centered approach combining:

- guided visits and field exploration
- interactive workshops on heritage-based pedagogy
- project-based creation of educational materials
- collaborative tasks and peer reflection
- use of digital tools for documentation

Participants design a heritage-linked lesson and share best practices.

TARGET GROUP

- Regional and local authorities;
- School/ adult centre management department, collaborators and volunteers
- Teachers & school staff

LEARNING OUTCOMES

By the end of the course, participants will be able to:

- Understand how cultural heritage supports interdisciplinary learning.
- Use heritage sites, artefacts and traditions to enhance classroom activities.
- Design creative tasks such as storytelling, mapping and project work.
- Integrate digital tools for documenting and presenting cultural resources.
- Foster intercultural dialogue and community engagement.
- Create transferable heritage-based materials and strategies.
